At length he called a monster meeting at Clentarf, near Dublin, on Sunday 8th October, 1843, and the preparations for it including a body of "repeal cavilry" had such a military air that the government thought it time to interiere. On 7th October, a proclamation was issued, declaring the public peace endangered by these meetings, and warning all persons to keep away from Clontarf, Mr. O'Connell thereup on withdrew the call for the meeting and the people generally staid away. Notwithstanding this, however, on the 14th of October, he was arrested with charges of conspiracy, sedition and twelve months, and to pay a fine of £2,000, and was bound over to keep the peace for seven years. An appeal was taken, however, to the House of Lords, and the decision of the Irish Judge was reversed. This trial gave a death blow to the repeal movement. After this he grew anxious and feeble and at length ill, so that he was oball persons who would speak of Ireland. Early in 1817, he set out on a pilgrim-

The Monster | Snake, Its Capture and Escape Baltimore American, 26th.]

It will be remembered that a few veeks ago the American gave a description of a monster snake, which it. Like all other societies it has been it was claimed, had been seen in the vicinity of Hall's Springs, on the Harford road. Several parties have been organized in the city for the purpose of hunting his snakeship, but most of them, on going out to Hall's Springs and hearing the marvelous stories told about the serpent, concluded that discretion was the better part of valor and that they would let him severaly alone. They were told that the snake was fully sixteen feet long, that he could swallow a calf several weeks old that a four-year old child would make only a half a meal for him, that he could travel faster than the fleetest horse in the county, and that when in pursuit of an object he could shoot over an ordinary country fence or In fact, the most wonderful stories are told about this snake, and it is food and raiment, for, be assured so safe to say that in a month's time his size will have increased in the minds feet in length, and that he will be fully able by that time to swallow a whole cow, horns and all, without any choking. On Saturday there were rumors in Baltimore that the snake had been caught and had afterwards made his escape. The rumors were tracked to the Baltimore Corn and Flour Exchange, of which Mr. Lee, of Messrs, Lee & Shaw, is a member, Mr. Lee 's the owner of the OliveHill, situated a short distance beyond Hill's Springs. This gentleman resides near the mill and a reporter of the American visited him vesterday for the purpose of ascertaining the very latest concern-ing the snake, Mr. Lee stated that
